No Apprehension Was Felt That There Would Be Mob Violence.

After a session of two hours the grand jury found true bills for murder against Nease Gillespie, Jienry Gillespie, John Gillespie, Jack Dillingham and Della Dillingham. The prisoners were immediately brought from the courty jall into court and the indictions read to them by Solicitor Hammer, charging the wifful murder of four members of the Lyerly fally.

by Solicitor Hammor, chark, and the Lyerly fally.

Each prisoner in turn pleaded not guilty, and a trial was ordered. Attorneys for the defense made a notion for a removal of the case to another county, alleging that a fair trial cannot be had in Rowan. The motion was opposed by the solicitor, and the motion for removal was overruised by Judge Long. A special vanice of two hundred men were ordered summoned from which to select a petitive, The six prisoners were brought from Charlotte to Rowan jall shortly after midnight this morning.

Anticipating the arrival of the alleged murderers, a large mob met the train, but the sheriff had left the same in the suburbs of the city and conveyed his prisoners to a livery stable, where they were guarded by a dozen deputies.

Judge Long devoted most of his charge to the subject of lynching, declaring that the prisoners would be protected at all hazards, and that any interference with such intent would be summarly punished.

At the close of to-day's sitting of the court, the prisoners were taken back to fall. At this time no apprehension of mob violence was felt by the authorities.

Two little girls were asieep in the second story of the house, aged about eight and six years, respectively. The oldest of the two was awakened by the smell of smoke, and, hand in hand, the little tots investigated the cause, and came upon the awful scene of father, mother, sister and brother dead, and the beds and floor presenting the most horrible spectacle of blood and disorder.

Sitting under the bed was a lighted lamp, placed there with a view of setting the bed after and burning the house to conceal the crime.

The plans of the mob became known, however, and the arrangements for resistance were so powerful that the scheme was abandoned.

It, however, seems probable that the organization then effected to seek the lives of these black wretches had its fruition in last night's awful work.
